Drafting a long-term, comprehensive community plan means listening to residents' concerns, taking a close look at existing and future land uses in the city, and keeping an eye on the city's major land-use developments such as the new expansion at Union Station, the downtown waterfront district, and the proposed downtown Greenbelt. It's an all-encompassing process that takes years to complete, and the planned sessions include a preview and information on the city's Land Use Area Code (LUAC) for the downtown area. Staff have previously met with community groups, businesses and organizations to help shape the final plan, which will inform decisions about city policies and programs related to planning, land use, housing and transportation. More information can be found here. Preliminary LUAC maps for the downtown area can be viewed here and at Blodgett Centre, and final LUAC maps for other parts of the city will be available soon. To have your say on the overall plan, drop by
